Chapter 1 by Jack Frost

As a boy Sora had lost his loved ones at the hands of Lucifer. On that day he swore that he would have his revenge no matter what. After the incident he traveled with the money he had been left with all around the world searching for clues.

While traveling he had stumbled in one town, a weird one at that. The buildings' tops couldn't be seen from the clouds, like they were limitlessly stretching out to the ends of space and the citizens were a little different from him in their physical appearance. He had entered one tent in which an old man resided. There he humbly bowed to the old man as he told him that somehow he felt that the old man will teach him something crucial or perhaps a way to fight the unknown force. "So you are the destined one"- The man smiled as he took the boy's hand gripping it firmly "I shall teach you young one. You hold great power inside you and I will be the one to set it free." As years passed he studied under the guidance of the wise old man, who taught him various forms of hand-to-hand combat, how to use various weapons as well as how to control his spiritual energy within him. One day while he was training a strange red aura started surrounding him, as he was slowly losing consciousness. Upon waking he had realized that he wasn't in the forest where he was previously training. The place he was currently at was void, without anything in it. The floor was light red, while the sky was that of a crimson red color.

Suddenly a voice echoed inside the void.

"It is you master. I have been expecting you."
